Memory Machine

William J. Schrom, head of the United Anti-Crime League, pounded his hand heavily on the wooden desk in the main room of the City Hall. And there wasn't the slightest doubt that he was angry. This time he could back up his words with actions.

"Mayor Allon," he half shouted, "the time has passed for words. What this city wants is action! Every newspaper is backing my organization in its demand that you get rid of the Number Rackets. We will no longer tolerate the way that Jack Florin and his boys flout the law. Unless you find a way to smash them, then you might as well consider yourself a dead political duck. You will never hold any office in this city or state."

His Honor, John Percival Allon was conscious of the little drops of perspiration that were forming on his forehead. He was searching for the right words to use as an answer when his brother-in-law, Walter Chestler replied.

"Why do you always pick on the Mayor? Leave him alone!"

"You big overstuffed elephant," snapped back Mr. Schrom, "if you had an ounce of sense in your head you would be a moron. Get out of here before I lose my temper."

The big bulk of human flesh slowly rose from the chair and left the room. The Mayor sighed.

"My sister had to go and marry that creature. Now, with him out of here I can think a little clearer. I am going to visit the Anti-Racket Bureau and see if they can help. And I am not going over the head of my own police department. Chief Garrison and I discussed this matter last week. In fact, this afternoon at four I have an appointment to talk over the situation with the head of the Anti-Racket Bureau, Michael Benson.

The famous racket buster was in his office when the Mayor entered. He greeted him and then came right to the point.

"Under our grant of power, we can enter on our own initiative when there is a federal law involved or when inter-state commerce, business, or activity is concerned. We can also enter upon the request of any local state subdivision. You have made the request and we will throw all the power and force of our bureau behind you. But it won't be easy. We are well aware of the fact that this Jack Florin has an entirely new gimmick in the numbers racket. Tomorrow one of my operatives will place a bet and then report to me."

It was about three in the afternoon. An automobile was parked on a side street. A thin nervous man was at the wheel of the car. Jack Florin himself was standing next to his car. A woman came up to him and handed him a dollar bill.

"One dollar on number 376. Last night I had a dream and saw that number on a door. So it must be lucky. My name is Hilda Schmidt. I live at 45 East Pine Street."

Jack Florin took the dollar bill and pocketed it. What he did not know was that in the apartment house across the street, an operative of the Anti-Racket Bureau was taking notes of various people placing bets. Another operative was clocking the number of people betting.

An old man came up to Jack Florin and handed him five dollars.

"My name is Peter Burns. I live in the Wellington Arms Hotel on Main Street. I saw on my taxi meter the numbers 7623. Place my bet on that number."

Jack Florin took the bet and then made a rather observant remark that had its effect.

"I never saw you before. I think you are a cop. But I'll take the money. Without any policy slip you can't prove a thing on me."

The next day Michael Benson showed the film to Chief Garrison and then gave him some facts.

"Three hundred and ten people placed bets with Jack Florin. He suspected my operative. You can't get a conviction unless you get the evidence. No policy slips are given to the people. Yet he pays off the winners. There are two other ways in which this could be done. He could have a wire recorder concealed in that car. Or a special short wave transmitter might be used. Pick up that car tomorrow morning on some traffic technicality. Take the car to your police garage. I will have some of my specialists go over the car. If we have to strip it down and take it apart, bolt by bolt, we will do so."

The next morning, Patrolman Frank Henderson made the arrest. He opened his traffic book of regulations and pointed out that the car was parked in a one hour restricted zone.

"Who ever heard of it?" protested Jack Florin. "I'll go with you. But I'll be out as soon as I contact my lawyer."

They went over that car from top to bottom. And neither a wire or tape recorder could be found. Nor any kind of a transmitter. Michael Benson was puzzled and then Chief Garrison came to him with a bit of cheerful news.

"The desk sergeant says he is sure he saw the driver of that car before. His name is Herbert Fortgang. We have his address and we even got a set of his prints. He was thirsty and we gave him a glass of water. He fell for that old trick. Send the prints to Washington on an A-1 priority and see what we can learn by tomorrow. Meanwhile the sergeant is checking mug shots."

But the report came back "No Record". And Michael Benson had the sergeant, Thomas J. Nolan brought to his office.

"If you can only give us some inkling where you saw that driver, we might be able to smash this racket. Somehow they have a way of keeping a record of names, numbers, and bets and we can't find out how they do it. Maybe they have a memory machine."

"That's it!" shouted the police officer. "This guy was a memory machine. I saw him three years ago with the Kingston & Willis Circus out in Illinois. Went there on my vacation to visit my sister. Went to the circus one evening. They had a lot of side shows. This guy would have every person give the name, when born, the address, and a number. Then he would repeat everything."

Michael Benson smiled. For now he had the clue to the racket. He at once called the police commissioner and told him to come over. They would work out a plan. And when the Police Commissioner arrived, Michael Benson, informed him of what was going to take place.

"Herbert Fortgang's real name is Sidney Dodd. He never filed an income tax return. So we get him on that. With him out of the picture, Jack Florin has to fold up. We are picking up the Memory Machine right now."

It was five that afternoon when Michael Benson got bad news from the Police Commissioner.

"Somebody shot Jack Florin. Why? Go figure that one out. Sure, the racket is busted. But a killer is a killer. Even if his victim is a gangster. Hollistics is getting me a report. It won't be of much value unless we got the murder gun. And the only way we really can get that gun is to find the killer himself."

The next day everything was wonderful at City Hall. William J. Schram, head of the United Anti-Crime League was full of smiles as he spoke to the mayor.

"We think it was a very sensible move of yours going to the Anti-Racket Bureau. The career of Jack Florin is ended. However there must be eternal vigilance against others who in the future may try different rockets."

He turned to Michael Benson who was present with the police commissioner and added.

"As long as there are capable men to enforce our laws and to get the criminals, we will all be safe. But how did Jack Florin work his racket?"

Walter Chestler was reclining in a chair and had a stick in his two cents of advice.

"They got a fellow from the circus who was a Memory Machine to remember all the bets."

"How do you know that?" snapped back the ever alert Michael Benson. "We didn't release that fact to either the newspapers or the radio."

Suddenly the man squirmed as if caught in a trap. The Police Commissioner made the logical conclusion.

"Then you must be the brains behind it all. You killed Jack Florin because the game was up with the Memory Machine arrested and out of use. With Florin out of the way, nobody would ever suspect you."

Walter Chestler went for the concealed gun he carried but never made it. For the greatest crime of all is murder and the penalty for that is inevitable.
